Discovering the Underground Railroad: Junior Ranger Activity Book

This booklet targeted at young children presents brief history of the Underground Railroad as a story of human courage, endurance and the belief of individual freedom. Due to the secretive nature of the railroad, it is unknown just how many freedom seekers attempted to escape or achieved a new life in freedom. Nor is it possible to document all the individuals sometimes called by the code name, "Conductors" -- who opposed slavery and risked their lives and well-being to assist freedom seekers in their journey. This booklet shares stories of a few conductors along the Underground Railroad and also features some of the African Americans who escaped slavery then joined the Union Army and Navy during the Civil War to fight against the Confederate States and to permanently abolish slavery. African American troops in the Union Army were called "United States Colored Troops or USCTs".

This booklet produced by the National Park Service Omaha office offers a Junior Ranger Badge by completing the activities in the booklet then sending the booklet to the Omaha Office at the address mentioned in the booklet. A ranger will go over the submitted answers and return the booklet along with an official Junior Ranger Badge for the child's efforts.
